Biography

Since qualifying as an occupational therapist in 1999, Catherine has worked both in the NHS and independent practice in clinical, managerial and case management roles specialising in rehabilitation for complex physical trauma alongside psychological, neuropsychological and neurological sequelae.

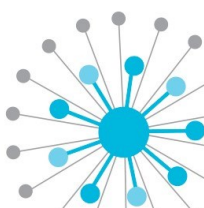

Her case management approach is firmly client-centred, utilising her occupational therapy skills in creative problem solving to meet the needs of her clients, the majority of whom have extensive and life changing injuries.

She maintains her clinical practice on a part-time basis, enabling her to keep current best practice at the forefront of her case management work. She is highly regarded by all professionals with whom she works, her clients and their carers.

She is accomplished in delivering comprehensive assessments and preparing detailed and informative case management, initial needs assessment and occupational therapy reports. She is highly experienced in designing and implementing complex rehabilitation packages, bringing together teams of treating health and rehabilitation professionals, coordinating their involvement to ensure the best possible outcomes for the client.

She maintains a strong focus on restoration of function within the client's home, work and wider community, drawing on a mixture of both private and statutory resources to meet their needs.

She has comprehensive skills in vocational assessment and rehabilitation, working collaboratively with clients and employers to facilitate positive outcomes. She is accomplished in addressing both the physical barriers to occupation as well as the psychological impact of trauma and injury on her clients' well-being.
