Biography

Since qualifying as an occupational therapist in 2001, Amy has worked across statutory and private sectors, including acute, rehabilitation and community services.

Her clinical career spans a broad spectrum of conditions, including acquired and traumatic brain injuries, trauma and complex orthopaedic injuries and long-term health conditions.

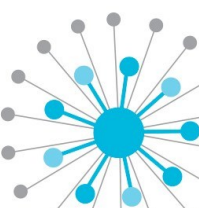

Throughout her career, Amy has developed specialist expertise in neurological rehabilitation, vocational rehabilitation and pain management. In her current role as a rehabilitation case manager, she supports clients with complex and often life-changing injuries throughout their rehabilitation journey.

She works collaboratively with clients and their families, as well as multidisciplinary teams, insurance providers, solicitors, statutory services and employers, to facilitate optimal recovery and independence.

She is committed to continuous professional development and the delivery of high-quality, evidence-based interventions.

Amy is a registered case manager and holds a master's-level qualification in Advancing Professional Practice.

She remains dedicated to maintaining excellence in both clinical and case management practice.
